SYMPHONIC BLISS
"Night Music" Yields Luscious Noise.

San Diego, CA (March 1, 2010) -- The third interlude of the Luscious Noise performance series at Anthology continues on March 14th with the motif -- "Night Music." Members of the San Diego Symphony will transport audiences to old Vienna as they perform:

- Beethoven's "Septet"
- Mozart's "Ein Kleine Nachtmusik" and "Clarinet Quintet"
- Franz Schreker's "Intermezzo"
- Schoenberg's affecting arrangement of Gustav Mahler's "Songs of a Wayfarer"

Conductor John Stubbs, producer of the event says, "The highlight of this show will be the 'Songs of a Wayfarer' by Gustav Mahler. It was arranged for a small ensemble by Arnold Schoenberg for exactly this purpose; being able to present these works in an intimate environment with small forces."

The evening event will also feature performance footage with....

- Carlos Kleiber conducting the Vienna Philharmonic performing Strauss's famous waltz "The Blue Danube"
- Soprano Natalie Dessay's in her career defining role as Queen of the Night in Mozart's "The Magic Flute"
- Jiří Kylián's breath taking dance piece, "Petite Mort" performed to Mozart's "Piano Concerto"

Luscious Noise serves as a means for new audiences to come experience live classical music in a comfortable setting where they can eat, drink, and mingle while they watch the show. Some guests of the November and January performances have even found Luscious Noise to be a perfect outlet for introducing their children to classical music. Children of a mature six years of age and up have proven to be quite content.

Stubbs says, "I have gotten a tremendous amount of positive feedback from audience members who admitted to not knowing that much about classical music. And the members that did thoroughly enjoyed it."
